CRP Industries Inc. Receives ISO 9001:2000

Certificate of Approval

CARTERET, N.J., September 18, 2006 – CRP Industries Inc., a supplier of automotive and industrial products, has achieved registration of its Quality Management System under ISO 9001:2000, an international standard published by the International Standards Organization (ISO) that is used in numerous industries around the world to improve product and service quality.

ISO 9000 Standards are a worldwide compilation of best practices that set the basic rules for quality systems, whatever the product or service. ISO 9001:2000 certification confirms CRP complies with a defined level of quality in business activities that include documentation, process control, customer satisfaction and product quality. “This certification effort encompassed our entire organization and has helped us improve the way we do business in all areas, resulting in consistently higher levels of quality that our customers will see throughout our business process,” commented Dan Schildge, Chief Operating Officer.

A primary goal in designing CRP’s quality management system was the ability to respond rapidly to all customer inquiries and requirements. The ISO 9001:2000 standards require an organization to maintain an ongoing process of quality management and measurement focused on meeting customer expectations. CRP views ISO 9001:2000 registration not as an end goal, but rather as a step in the continuous improvement of the organization. Through this registration, CRP can assure its customers that its business processes are both well-documented and conform to the same standards of quality upheld by many of world's largest, highly regarded companies.

"This achievement would not have been accomplished if it weren't for the total dedication of each and every CRP employee," Mr. Schildge said. "The ISO 9001:2000 Quality Management System certification validates the hard work and dedication that our people have put into developing a company that has quality at the core of everything we do."
